BILLINGS – Volunteers are need to help with the Rocky Mountain College 7th Annual Yellowstone River Cleanup, Saturday, Sept. 14, 2013. Canoes, kayaks, drift boats and rafts are also being sought to help with the effort. The project is organized by the Yellowstone River Research Center.

Volunteers are asked to gather at either RMC, in the parking lot west of the Bair Science Building, at 6:30 a.m., or at the Duck Creek fishing access at 7 a.m.

“It’s a fun float with a serious intent, to pick up trash along the most industrialized section of the Yellowstone River,” said Kayhan Ostovar, RMC associate professor, biology and environmental science. “Expect to get dirty and tired, but know it helps make Billings a cleaner and healthier community.”

Volunteers are provided t-shirts, lunches and drinks, but are asked to bring their own sun hats, water bottles, sun screen, and gloves.
